

UNHOLY ISLAND
(18th May 2007)

Unholy Island is a British horror movie in the style of American Werewolf In London, Dog Soldiers and The Wicker Man.

A group of friends from London travel to the beautiful Northumberland coast, spending an idyllic day at the beach of Bamburgh Castle, before driving across to the Holy Island of Lindisfarne.

As a tidal island, Holy Island is linked to the mainland by a long metalled causeway, and twice each day the tide sweeps in from the North Sea and covers the road making it impossible to leave the island by car! Although tide times and heights can be accurately predicted from the phases of the Moon, severe weather can produce offsets, particularly with strong winds from the North and North East...

Unfortunately, the 'out of towners' are blissfully unaware of the changing tides, and after spending the day poking fun at the old-fashioned customs of the islands 150 person population in the local pub, when they decide it's time to leave, they discover that they're stuck on the island and must survive the night with the increasingly hostile islanders.

Attacked by the Vikings in 793AD, Holy Island has a murderous and bloodthirsty past and it doesn't take long before they realise that nothing is as it seems with the 16th Century Medieval Castle and ruins of a Benedictine Monastery serving as the backdrop to human sacrifice and devil worship by some evil monks.

With no way of escape until morning, who will survive the night on Unholy Island?

Paul Lancaster
plandigital@live.co.uk
@lordlancaster
07734 722 716